

DANIEL WEBB.

WEBB OF FROCESTER

E. F. Webb

Thomas (?) Webbe = Helen (nee Browne, a widow living at Frocester in 1522)

Born circa 1465 and possibly descended from the Webbe family of Eastington through John Webbe of Cowley, the next village to Eastington and Frocester, who was assessed at £10 in the Military Survey of 1522. This John may have been the eldest son of Thomas Webbe of Churchend Mill, Eastington who died 1509, and also the father of Thomas Webbe of Frocester who died sometime before 1522 leaving a young family. The Webbes of Eastington, who had held the mill there since 1444, the Webbes of Frocester, and John Webbe of Coaley were all reasonably wealthy for the day, but the latter was not part of the manorial system suggesting he may have been in cloth production, and not farming. DNA evidence suggests the Webbes of Frocester shared a common ancestor pre 1500 with a Webb family long established in Northern Ireland. Skilled weavers were encouraged to settle in province during the 17th Century to help with the native linen industry and Roger Webb, born 1622 in Lurgan to Edward Webb, was one of the first men to practise Quakerism in Ireland. Thomas Webbe's immediate forbears were also likely to have been weavers, the traditional occupation of people bearing the name Webbe.

The two coats of arms above come from the bookplates of Daniel Webb who married Ann Peploe in 1790, and Elizabeth Frances, only daughter of Col. Edward Webb, M.P. for Gloucester in 1816. The Webb coat is that of the ancient family of Wolworth alias Webbe of Dursley and Wotton under edge, and it is yet to be established whether the Webbs of Frocester were entitled to use it, or indeed descend from the same family. It was bestowed upon a master Flemish Weaver called Richard who was encouraged to settle in Gloucestershire by King Edward III around 1320 to help our native weaving industry produce better cloth. According to a tradition recorded by Thomas Fuller in his 'Church History of Britain' of 1655 he was so successful that the King honoured him with the name Webbe (and a Coat of Arms) in recognition of his skill as a weaver.

Thomas = Elizabeth (or Isabel

Husbandman of Frocester who took over a copyhold lease in 1530 on 35.5 acres of land in Peter Street, Frocester and it passed down the Webb family under the name Browne Webb alias until 1724. It was common for copyhold leases to be held by two names separated by an alias and often indicated a woman had inherited a right to land which she then passed onto her husband. B. circa 1490 & d. 1548. He was according to the renewal of her lease after her widowhood (1550)

John = Margaret

Husbandman of Frocester d.1556. He took out a copyhold lease in 1533 on 23 acres of land in Frocester also under the name Webb alias Browne; it was for himself and the life of his daughter Joan. John Jr. probably died because Joan took over the copyhold with John Wayt alias Bonde, her husband. The cottage stood on the right hand side of the lodge gate to Frocester Court and there are still irregularities in the ground marking the site.

assessed at £8 in the Military Survey of 1522, a reasonable sum.

He was assessed at only 10s. in the Glos. Lay Subsidy of 1526.

He owned lands in Maismore and Sneedham near Gloucester and there were monuments to him, his wife and many of his descendants in St Michael's Church, Gloucester, before its demolition. According to a Military Survey of Gloucester in 1608 Nicholas was a very short man compared to his father and siblings which might explain why he was apprenticed to John Bower, a wealthy Gloucester Apothecary in 1601 (John Bower's enormous monument can still be seen in Gloucester Cathedral). Nicholas may not have been that strong as he died aged only 61. continued living in the property in Peter's Street until her own death in 1724 which bought the tenancy to a close after two hundred years. The site of the Webb's demolished house in Peter's Street is now occupied by a row of cottages numbered 8 - 11. The original timbered and thatched building was demolished around 1840. Frocester church registers record the death of Richard Harris - the illegitimate son of John Webb. His daughter Jane
