The Misadventure & Romance of Dr. Charles Henry Webb

The year was 1822. Charles Webb and his brother, John, had left South Carolina and were heading towards Philadelphia, and from there, would go on to St. Louis, where they hoped to make their fortunes. As they traveled down the Ohio River on a flatboat, they fell into a harrowing adventure that Charles would fortunately live to tell.

Charles and his brother John, both young men, had made it to Louisville where they remained a few days. From there, they had obtained passage on another flatboat, intending to go as far as the mouth of the Ohio River. This boat, a broadhorn, was loaded with corn, whisky and other provisions. The total number of passengers on board were six: the Captain of the boat, who was owner of much of the cargo, three boat hands, Charles and his brother John, who had both made a deal with the Captain to work for their passage.

Dear Project Members,

I would like to encourage those of you who have a gedcom to upload it to your personal page at Family Tree DNA, especially those who have taken the Family Finder test. This allows your DNA matches to conveniently view your family tree. If you go to your list of DNA matches on your personal page at FTDNA, the family trees of your matches can be viewed by "clicking" on the little dark blue "family tree" icon. Those who have taken the Family Finder test should also add a list of surnames to their personal page so that their FF matches can quickly see what surnames you share.

The project has hit the 300 member mark this month, and because of our large number of members, I ask that you let me know if you see any additions, corrections or information missing on the website. I work hard to keep up with all of the data input, but I know I sometimes miss things, so a quick email to alert me is always appreciated.

As they floated down the Ohio, these men began to form friendships and share a comradery. They passed the time with shooting competitions, dancing and song. Several days out from Louisville, Charles was playing his flute, unaware that they were approaching the notorious Cave-in-Rock, a place used for years by thieves to ambush boats that passed by. Suddenly, a woman appeared on the bluff above the cave and she waved to them with a white cloth. The Captain brought the boat in closer to shore so that he could speak to her and ask if she needed assistance. As they came closer, a man came out of the cave and asked whether there was any bacon or whisky on board. The Captain answered that there was. The man explained that he wanted to buy some provisions, as they had run short. The Captain replied that he didn't want to break up his load before he reached his destination on the lower Mississippi. The man countered that he would make the transaction worth his while as they had a woman and a boy on shore that would pay for passage to the mouth of the Cumberland. The Captain finally agreed, but asked that they board quickly so that they could be on their way.

They took to shore two hundred yards below the cave. The Captain along with two of the boat hands and John Webb, Charles' brother, walked to the entrance of the cave. Charles and the remaining boat hand stayed on board. Several hours passed and they did not return. At this point, Charles asked the man who had stayed behind with him, to go and see what was detaining them. The man left, but time passed, the sun went down, and not one of them had returned.

Charles was left alone in the dark; his only companion was a howling dog that was on board the boat. His uneasiness grew as time passed, when finally, in the dim light he could see three men approaching. He was hopeful they were part of the crew, but when they boarded the boat with guns drawn, he quickly realized he was deceived. They bound Charles arms behind his back and threatened to blow his brains out if he struggled. He was told that the Captain had sold the boat and its cargo, but that is all they would tell him. Charles was then blindfolded and put into a skiff. Charles begged to be told what happened to his brother and pleaded with them for their release. He explained to them that he and his brother were only passengers on the boat and not part of the crew, and so had no interest in the boat nor its cargo. The men just told him to be quiet. As they rowed along, Charles could only guess at what direction they were going, but soon they appeared to come up to another skiff. He could hear men in low voices talking, but could not make out their words. One of the men came and whispered in Charles ear. This particular man seemed to have mercy on Charles, and he whispered that they were going to go against what the other members in their group had decided would be his fate, and turn him loose in the middle of the river. If he were quiet until he drifted far away, and "lay low" until the morning, he may have a chance of getting away. The man then loosened Charles' arms from the ropes that bound them and told him not to loosen them further until about an hour had passed. Charles was then told to never come back to those parts or ask any questions about what happened that night. Charles was then left alone in the skiff.

For a while, Charles had assumed that the men in the other skiff remained close by, watching him, but he heard nothing. He remained quiet for an hour or more as the man had warned him to do. All he could hear was the wind in the trees along the shore, the barking of wolves and the occasional hooting of great owls. It took some work, but he finally freed his arms and removed his blindfold. The night was dark and it was hard to see anything other than the faint line of the shore. He soon discovered that he was floating with out a paddle and very slowly, too. The futility of the situation quickly made itself apparent and he decided to lie down and get some sleep. As fate would have it, a storm rolled in with great fury. His skiff was dashed about by the wind and waves, and lightning lit up the sky. Charles became more and more alarmed with his situation when the rain turned torrential and began to fill his little boat. His only recourse was to use his thick leather shoe to bail out the skiff. This went on for more than an hour, when the storm finally subsided.

As he continued along he looked for any signs of life along the shore: perhaps a cabin or a fire. At times he would yell out, but no one answered. Eventually he came upon an island and though it was still dark, he could make out some smoke rising above the trees. He vigorously paddled to shore using his hands. Upon reaching the shore, he secured his boat and soon found a cabin. A Mr. Prior and his wife lived there and they fed Charles breakfast and listened to his story about what had happened to him. Mr. Prior was one of the earliest settlers in that area and had good knowledge of the gang at Cave-in-Rock. He told Charles that he was very lucky indeed to have escaped. Mr. Prior made a paddle for Charles' skiff and advised him to travel down to the town of Smithland at the mouth of the Cumberland, and there ask for assistance. Charles arrived in Smithland that evening.

Charles was told in Smithland to go on to Salem. In Salem, Judge Dixon Given advised him to go to Col. Arthur Love and ask for help in securing the safety of his brother who had been captured at the cave. Col. Love lived only a short distance from James Ford, a man suspected for many years to be the leader of the Cave-in-Rock gang, but no charges were ever brought against him for lack of evidence.

This story quickly turned from harrowing adventure and escape to romance when Charles Webb fell off a horse and sprained his ankle on his way to Col. Love's farm. Cassandra Ford, James Ford's daughter, discovered Charles lying on the road. Cassandra took Charles to her home and it wasn't long until Charles figured out that he was at the home of the leader of the Cave-in-Rock gang. James Ford was not at home, and Cassandra and her mother told Charles that they suspected that their father and husband might be involved with the gang. Charles was even shown the flute that was stolen from him back at the cave.

Charles convalesced at the Ford place and soon James Ford returned. Charles would later describe him as "of powerful build, a perfect Hercules in point of strength; but he has now grown too corpulent to undergo much fatigue... His complexion is very florid, and he converses fluently. On the whole, when in repose, he gives one the idea of a good natured, rather than a surly, bulldog; but, if aroused, I should say he would be a lion tamer."

Charles' ankle healed and he took his flute and went back to Salem. It appears that he couldn't get Cassandra Ford off his mind, and he began to court her. During this time, he heard that his brother, John, had been released unharmed, and he eventually located him in St. Louis.

Charles Webb and Cassandra Ford were married on February 5, 1827 in Livingstone Co. Kentucky. They settled in Princeton, Caldwell Co. Kentucky where Charles set up his practice as a physician. Dr. Charles H. Webb died in 1844 when the steamboat "Lucy Walker" exploded and caught fire near New Albany. He made it to shore, but died later from his wounds. The event was recorded in the Louisville Courier where it said that fifty or sixty were killed.

Most credible sources place Dr. Charles H. Webb as the son of Dr. Charles H. Webb & Mary Todd Ware of the Isaac Webb m. Frances Barber line. This parentage appears to have been proven, although the "History of Medical Practice in Illinois" by Lucius H. Zeuch MD, 1921, states that Charles Webb and his brother John were born in Scotland, came to America and then went to South Carolina where their adventure began. One can also find family trees that place Charles and John Webb's birthplace as South Carolina, probably taken from the Cave-in-Rock account. It is unclear whether Charles and John Webb were ever in South Carolina or whether this part of the story was fiction.

Indiana*Centennial History of Rush County, Indiana

“Alva Webb, owner of 160 acres of valuable land in Rushville township, has the satisfaction of possessing the homestead of his family to which he is very much attached. He was born in Rushville township on April 8, 1871, son of Arthur and Cassandra [Plessinger] Webb, both natives of Rush county. For fourteen years after his marriage Arthur Webb lived in Shelby county, Indiana, but then moved back to Rush county and located on the 160-acre farm now owned by his son, and here he spent the remainder of his life, having always been a farmer. He and his wife had eight children of whom four survive: Maria, Horatio C., Inis and Alva. Growing up in Rushville township, Alva Webb attended the Webb school, which was named in honor of his father, upon whose farm it was located. After leaving school Alva Webb began farming with his father, remaining at home until he was twenty-eight years old. When he was twenty-six he was married, but did not leave the homestead for two years thereafter, and then went on a rented farm in Walker township, on which he remained for two years. Returning to Rushville township he rented the farm adjoining the homestead for 10 years. At the expiration of that period he bought his father's old farm from his estate and has the entire 160 acres, on which he is carrying on general farming and raises about 200 head of hogs annually. On May 26, 1897, Mr. Webb was married to Mrs. Dora [Hollowell] Emmons, a widow with one daughter, Hattie L. Emmons. She is a daughter of William and Lydia [Davis] Hollowell, both of whom were born in Rush county, where William Hollowell was engaged in farming. Of their four children, Mrs. Webb is the only survivor....”

First Christian Church in Columbia Township 1829-1830

“A society of the Christian church was organized by Rev. John D. Thompson at the home of Judge Webb, along the river near Nulltown in 1829 or 1830.”

Edward Webb Family of Fayette Co.

“On November 22, 1897, Josephus Wright Holter was united in marriage to May Webb, who was born eight miles southwest of Connersville, in Columbia township, and is the daughter of Forrest M. and Cornelia [Jones] Webb. Her father was born on the farm in the county, that his grandfather Edward Webb had owned. Both her father and mother were born in Columbia township, Fayette county. Great-grandfather Webb, who was Edward, was born in 1769 in Virginia. He went to Boone county, Kentucky, then to Indiana Territory, near Harrison, Ohio, and later, in 1811, to Fayette county, Columbia township, where he died on July 21, 1851. He was one of the associate judges for twenty-seven years. Since that time the farm has been out of the family for but thirty years, and is now owned by May Webb Holter. Forrest Webb received his education in old log school house. He continued to reside on the old Webb homestead, until the death of his wife, Cornelia [Jones] Webb, on May 24, 1880, when he retired from the farm, and was later married and moved to Laurel. In addition to being a successful farmer, Mr. Webb, at one time operated a grist-mill at Milroy, and was interested in a drug-store with Doctor Gifford. He was also an extensive dealer in live stock, and was known as one of the substantial and influential men of the county. He was a staunch Republican, and his father had been a supporter of the principles of the Whig party. He was active member of the Christian church and the Knights of Pythias lodge. By his first wife he was the father of three children, Forrest, who died in 1876; Nellie May and Paul Jones, who is now deceased. By his second marriage one child was born, Harry I., a conductor on the Big Four railroad. The Webb family were always prominent in the activities of the county, and had much to do with its development and improvement. The early members of the family having come to this section of the state when the greater part of the district was an undeveloped wilderness. And when the government was still having much trouble with the Indians. Their lives were hard ones, and much honor and credit are due them for the work that they did. They assisted in the laying of a foundation for a splendid government, the establishment of good schools and the building of churches. Today the splendid farms, modern schools, beautiful churches and up-to-date towns and cities are due to the men and women who first settled in this county.

Josephus Wright and May [Webb] Holter are the parents of one child, Forrest Webb, who was born on September 6, 1899...”
