Colonel A. H. Webb, Argonaut, & the Bald Hill Incident

Colonel A. H. Webb was born in Tennessee between 1823 and 1828 and came to California with the first rush of gold-seekers in 1849. He lived part of his life in the gold rush towns of Northern Carolina, working as a merchant, and then briefly lived in Silver City, Idaho, where he was the Treasurer of Owyhee Co. He returned to California and sometime between 1880 and 1887, became the secretary of the State Board of Horticulture.

His obituary appeared in the March 12th, 1887 edition of the Pacific Rural Press, an agricultural newspaper published in San Francisco:

“Death of Col. A. H. Webb

The death of Col. A. H. Webb, secretary of the State Board of Horticulture, which occurred on March 2, at his residence in Oakland, will be heard with regret by many. Col. Webb was a pioneer, having come to the State in '49. Except five years spent in Idaho, he lived most of the time in the mining districts of Northern

Dear Project Members,

I have added a new page on our website called “Inquiry.” This page will be a dedicated place for research inquiries for the surname Webb. If you would like to post your specific research inquiries, email them to me and I will add them to this page. We get a lot of traffic on the website by both members and non-members, so there is always a chance of getting leads or answers to your questions.

“Some time after Webb returned to the coast some one asked him, “Colonel, suppose the planter had asked you the name of the man who shot his nephew, what would you have said?” I would have told him that his name was Webb, but don’t know that I should have taken any particular pains to impress him with the thought that I was that particular Webb.”.

California, engaging in mining and trade. Upon the reorganization of the State Board of Horticulture at the beginning of Gen. Stoneman’s term, Col. Webb was chosen secretary, and served the board in that capacity up to the time of his death. He was liked by all for his genial and gentlemanly manner, and respected for his strict attention to his duties. He had been out of health for some months, but clung to his work too long for physical good and so weakened his system that it could not shake off disease. He died peacefully and quietly, though he had suffered much during the last weeks of his life.

Col. Webb was a native of Tennessee, and was born in 1828. He leaves a widow, a son and a daughter to mourn his loss. The funeral services were held in Oakland on Thursday, March 3d. Unfortunately, adequate announcement was not made of his death, and many were prevented from paying the last tribute to his memory, because they were not informed of his demise. Suitable action will be take at the next meetings of the State Horticultural Society and the State Board of Horticulture to testify the respect paid his memory by our fruit-growers.”

- San Francisco, Saturday, March 12, 1887, Pacific Rural Press.

There appears to be at least two versions of a raucous gun fight story involving Col. A. H. Webb and the “Duncan Brothers” which took place in Shasta County, California during his first years there. There is one account of the story that appeared in a 1888 newspaper article, and it may be from this article that the story was taken from and told in the book, “A Memorial and Biographical History of Northern California,” published in 1891. Whether the story was told and retold by Col. A. H. Webb himself, or whether family or the witnesses kept the story alive, is unclear. There are parts of the story that only Col. A. H. Webb could have known, but because the retelling of the story was published in a newspaper after his death, it seems that someone close to Col. A. H. Webb must have been the contributor. The 1888 newspaper article version stated the following: “probably only a small portion of his numerous friends and acquaintances are aware that he has led a most adventurous life, as was indeed but natural, when it is considered that his childhood was spent in then frontier Arkansas, while his early manhood saw him push yet farther west with the first flood of the gold-seekers of ’49.”

Below is the version of the story as it appeared in the book, “A Memorial and Biographical History of Northern California.” For reasons unknown, one of the towns involved was misidentified as Harristown, when in fact the town was called Horsetown. The 1888 version does give the correct name of that town.

Webb and the Duncan Brothers of Shasta Co.

In 1852 Colonel A. H. Webb was living in Harristown, Shasta County, where he kept a store. He shrewdly preserved the good people from Indian depredations. During that period three bothers named Duncan, apparently of the Caucasian race but really one-quarter Indian blood and identified with the Cherokee nation, were causing much trouble in the community. They were large and stout, and very rough in manners and morals. One day two of these brothers, mounted upon half-broken mustangs, rode into and out of every house in the village, apparently on a wager, but making an exception of Mr.

Webb's store, as the proprietor said he could not afford to have his goods damaged. They respected him. But the next day, having been taunted by a boon companion with the failure to fully complete the stipulations of the bet, the two men determined to do so come what would. Mr. Webb gave no more thought to the matter and was upon the second day busy about the store, when with a clatter and crash the younger of the two Duncans forced his foaming and struggling mustang directly into the store. Mr. Webb turned toward the intruder in astonishment and anger, and Duncan noticing his indignation and immediately giving rein to his natural insolence, exclaimed with an oath, "perhaps you do not like my riding in here?" Irritated beyond endurance, Webb stepped rapidly behind the desk, snatched a loaded revolver and covered the desperado in an instant, while he answered with stern emphasis, "No, I don't like it; and you have just twenty seconds to ride out of here before you get this bullet in your brain. Go!" Duncan saw the merchant's deadly purpose, and, wheeling his horse, dashed out of the store in an instant.

The news that Mr. Webb had driven one of the Duncans out of the store at the muzzle of a pistol soon spread about, and while it increased his popularity with a majority of the inhabitants it changed the feeling of careless friendliness with which the desperado brothers had hitherto regarded him to one of bitter hatred, which every one predicted would speedily culminate in a tragedy. But more than a year elapsed without anything of that nature happening, and Webb moved to Bald Hill, in the same county, where he continued in the same business. The Duncans were as frequently seen there as at Harristown. At a local election soon held at that place the three Duncans were, as usual, making themselves the most conspicuous figures in the large assemblage, drinking and carousing. The polls were across the street from Webb's store, and Webb, being one of the judges of the election, left the store in charge of his partner. He saw young Duncan in the store, but paid no special attention to it, as it had been so long since the trouble they had had.

Suddenly Webb felt his long hair seized from behind and saw a bowie knife coming in the other hand of the villain toward him, when a young man named Kit seized the would-be murderer's arm and arrested the blow at the very instant when the point of the weapon was against Webb's breast. Foiled in his immediate purpose, but still retaining his hold both upon the knife and his intended victim, Duncan turned to the latter, saying tauntingly, while he savagely struggled to free his right arm for second blow, "Why don't you beg for your life?" "No, I will not," was the answer: "the sooner you let me go the better it will be for yourself." "Let you go?" shrieked the desperado as he struggled in vain to free his arm, "let you go! I will kill you first."

The crowd separated the men. Webb remained in his room, his enemy being forced out into the street, and, being unarmed, looked around for a weapon. Several rifles were lying about, but as he picked up one after another, the owners told him that they were not loaded. It struck him finally that the statements were not true, being made through the fear which most of the people had of Duncan and his gang, and examination of one of the rifles confirmed his suspicions. At this moment some one called out, "Duncan is in your store; he has attacked your partner." Webb sprang across the street and into the store, found the report true and raised the rifle; but Duncan let go, sprang into the back door, and as he put his hand into his hip-pocket to get a revolver Webb fired upon him and shattered the hand while in the pocket, and the bullet also entered the body. Duncan did not fall, but fired the weapon with his left hand, missing his mark: Webb rushed back to the polling place, got another gun, and as he merged into the street again Duncan came out of the store and fell on his face. The crowd urged Webb to finish killing him and rid the community of a desperado. A stalwart miner named Ridge, who was an educated Indian, also urged Webb to finish killing Duncan. Webb would not be persuaded to attack a fallen foe, and the latter was carried away by his friends. Webb was then warned that he did the most injudicious thing for the safety of both of himself and of the community. Sure enough, he was soon informed that threats of vengeance by the savages had been made. Seeing one of the Duncans passing one day, he said, "I have nothing to say to you personally, sir, but you will take this message to the young Duncan and his brother, tell them that if I hear of another word of threat being uttered against me, I will shoot young Duncan in his bed. Will you carry that message? The man promised compliance and probably fulfilled his promise, for no other threats were heard from them afterward.

Webb, shortly afterward visiting the county-seat, was surrounded by the citizens, who asked him whether he wanted a trial or not. He said he did not care- only the time attending one interfered with his business. The crowd immediately voted not to try him and gave him a banquet in the evening.

During the following year, 1854, Webb passed through the Cherokee Nation on a trip to the East. He stopped overnight on a fine plantation kept by a middle-aged Cherokee of mixed blood, though to all appearance a polished Southern gentleman. During the evening the following conversation ensued:

Host- "By the way, Mr. Webb, were you ever in a county in California which I think they call Shasta?"

Webb- "Certainly, I have lived there for several years past, and am very well acquainted there."

"Indeed! Then you must know my nephews, young Duncan and his brothers?"

"Oh, yes; I know them quite well. Are they your nephews, indeed?"

"Yes; my sister's children; but tell me, since you know them so well, is it true that young Duncan was shot last year in a quarrel with some desperado or other?"

Webb repressed a strange mixture of feelings and answered calmly, "It is said that he was shot; though why the man who did it can be justly termed a cut-throat desperado, I must say is by no means certain."

"Oh, well," said the Cherokee, "it is quite possible I may have heard it incorrectly; it was only a very indifferent account that reached me. Please tell me all the particulars."

Webb told them all, skillfully suppressing the name of the store-keeper in the affair, which his host did not notice.

"What became of the villain?" he finally asked; "is he still there?"

"I believe not. In fact, I know that he went away some months since, and I have reason to think he left the State."

"Well, it doesn't matter; I dare say it was young Duncan's fault, as you have suggested; he was always a wild youth, and when he drinks there is no holding him in."

The next morning, after a hearty breakfast, host and guest parted in a friendly manner. Some time after Webb returned to the coast some one asked him, "Colonel, suppose the planter had asked you the name of the man who shot his nephew, what would you have said?" I would have told him that his name was Webb, but don't know that I should have taken any particular pains to impress him with the thought that I was that particular Webb." "Suppose he discovered the truth: what would you have done?" "I can't say with any certainty, of course; but I think he would have entertained me just as hospitably, and the next morning he would have mounted his horse and ridden out on the prairie with me until we were out of the sight of the house, drawn a pistol and told me to defend myself." "What became of young Duncan?" "Oh, he flourished for several yeas afterward, but finally had a quarrel with some one else and got a bullet between the eyes."

According to several available family trees, Colonel A. H. Webb was born Alfred Houston Webb on July 17, 1823, Maury Co., Tennessee, and died March 10, 1887 in Oakland, California. He was the son of Meredith Burton Webb, born 1772 in South Carolina and Elizabeth Hafley, born in 1777 in Pennsylvania. The discrepancy in Alfred H. Webb's birth year in the censuses is not unusual. The 1850 census aligns with the 1823 birth year, but later censuses, news articles and the marriage record substantiate the 1828 birth year. Col. A. H. Webb married Helen S. Earll on June 4, 1858 in Tehema Co., California. They had at least two children.

A clue to why Alfred H. Webb used the title "Colonel" may be found in a June 15, 1867 article in an Idaho newspaper:

"Col. A. H. Webb, who has just returned from a sagebrush voyage on the Railroad Line as far as Camp McDermit, reports that two men named Black & Perry met with three Indians in the direction of White Horse from the former place, and killed one and got wounded themselves. The Indians, when discovered, began to retreat and were followed into some brush, where they showed fight to some purpose, but the men secured with guns instead of revolvers they would have killed all. One more dead Indian is worth mentioning." – The Owyhee Avalanche, June 15, 1867.

Colonel Alfred H. Webb's DNA, if a donor were available, should match the John Webb 1717 Richmond Co. NC DNA Group.

Research notes:

Col. A. H. Webb was living in Trinity Co., California during the 1850 census. He appears to have been in a household with other men who were in the mining trade. His age is given as 26 in 1850.

By 1860, after the Duncan brothers incident, he was living in Red Bluff, Tehama Co., California. A. H. Webb, age 28, was enumerated with a wife, E. A. Webb, age 19, born in New York, and a two-month old child, E. H. Webb. There is a marriage record for A. H. Webb & Helen S. Earll on June 4, 1858 in Tehema Co. A. H. Webb's age is given as 29, 10 mo., 17 days, born in Pennsylvania, and Helen S. Earll's age was 16 years, 8 months and 18 days, and born in Wisconsin. Regardless of the inconsistencies of the wife's name and birthplace in the marriage record compared to the 1860 Tehema Co. census, as well as the incorrect place of A. H. Webb's birth, it seems certain that this is the correct couple in the 1860 census. The Oak Hill Cemetery in Red Bluff states that the land for the cemetery was purchased from A. H. Webb in 1859.

The 1870 Owyhee Co. Idaho census shows A. H. Webb, County Treasurer, age 42, living with a 21 year old woman named Susie Bernard who was born in New York and was "housekeeping." We can be certain that this is Col. A. H. Webb because of his obituary. It begs the question, where was his wife and child?

By 1880, Col. A. H. Webb was back with his wife, Helen and their sixteen-year old daughter, living in Oakland, Alameda Co., California. This census tells us that Helen was born in Wisconsin in 1841, [not New York], and also tells us that Col. Webb's father was born in South Carolina and his mother was born in Pennsylvania. His profession was listed as "stock broker." In 1900, Helen S. Webb, widow, was living in Berkeley, California with her 81-year-old mother, Cornelia Earll. In 1910, Helen S. Webb, age 68, was living with her "grand-nephew," Christopher E. Webb, age 24, born in California. [Christopher's father was born in Arkansas and his mother was born in Louisiana.] This implies that one of Col. A. H. Webb's brothers or nephews came to California. The Dec 24, 1912 issue of the "San Francisco Call," announced the marriage license for Christopher E. Webb, 27, and Margaret Tibbits, 22, both of Berkeley, on December 23, 1912. Christopher and Margaret Tibbits Webb were living in Bakersfield, California in 1920, but were divorced by 1940. Margaret and two of her sons, Andrew T. and Christopher Webb were living in Palo Alto, California in 1940. Christopher Earll and Margaret Tibbits Webb had two other children, Margaret T. and Lawrence E. Webb. Christopher Earl Webb's WWII draft registration states that he was born in Redding, Shasta Co., California on August 10, 1886. Walker Webb, Col. A. H. Webb's nephew, was listed in the 1860 Shasta Co. census, but Walker Webb had left the state by 1890 and is not likely Christopher's father. Who Christopher Earl Webb's father was remains unknown, and why his middle name was the same as his great aunt's maiden name, a mystery.

California

"H. P. Webb is one of the promising young citizens and rancher of Saticoy, Ventura County. He came to California in 1879 from Memphis, Tennessee, where he was born March 25, 1856. His father, J. L. Webb, is a native of North Carolina, and was one of the first residents of Memphis. He was in the wholesale mercantile business, and was a dealer in cotton; was a man of liberal views, and a Democrat. The ancestors as far as known were residents of North Carolina. Mr. Webb's mother, Arina [Sheppard] Webb, was also born in the "Tar State." He is the youngest of a family of eleven children, and was reared and educated in Memphis, completing his education at the East Tennessee University. He clerked for several prominent firms of his native town and at the time he started for the far West he had the position of agent and salesman of the Alabama Lime Association.

Mr. Webb, after his arrival in California, spent eight years as a farmer at Carpenteria, and from there came to his present location, one of the most productive valleys in Southern California. He is the owner of fifty acres of choice land, ten acres of which are in English walnuts and three acres are devoted to apricots and prunes and a variety of other fruit. Mr. Webb has a nice home, surrounded with majestic shad and ornamental trees and attractive grounds. One of his principle crops is Lima beans, the land being especially adapted for their production.

Mr. Webb was married, in 1888, to Mrs. Franklin, widow of the late M. E. Franklin, who was a native of Mississippi. Mrs. Webb was born in Virginia. She has five children Grace, Earnest, Bernard, Nellie and Bessie. Mrs. Webb is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Webb possesses those courteous and affable manners so characteristic of the Southern gentleman, and guests are welcomed at their delightful home in a charming manner by both himself and Mrs. Webb."

"Colonel James Liddle, a Paso Robles business man and rancher, was born in Geneseo, Genesee County, New York, May 20, 1854. His father, George Liddle, was a native of England, and married Miss Martha Jane Webb, a native of Scotland. They came o the United States in 1840, settling in Genesee County, New York, where they reared thirteen children, of whom the Colonel was the youngest..."

Virginia Wills and Abstracts

William Everett Brockman, 1948

“Samuel Brockman married Mary, and their children were:

Samuel, m. Rebecca. d. not later than 1790.

William, m. Betty, Elizabeth Smith, dau. Thos. Smith and wife, Elizabeth Reynolds.

John, m. Mary Collings. d. 1756.

Mary, m. John Singleton

One daughter, Mary, m. John Crittenden Webb, 1754

Elizabeth m. Anthony Street

Sarah, m. John Henderson.

Rachel m. John Rogers.”

“John Haley is shown as a legatee in the division of property, 1776, upon death of the widow. Samuel’s [Brockman] will provided that the residue of the estate should be divided among “children surviving, and children of those sons or daughters deceased.” John Webb, a son-in-law of Mary Singleton, and Samuel Jr., son of John [deceased] received a share each. Just who John Haley, another legatee, was has not been determined. As a son of a deceased daughter he would be entitled to share. He could have been the second husband of a Mary Singleton. James Haley and wife Susannah deeded 126 acres to Samuel Brockman, Jr., on July 27, 1749. In 1751 James Haley and wife Belhiah executed a deed to Vivian Daniel indicating Susannah was then deceased.”

“Augustine Carter, born Oct. 22, 1741, made his will Oct. 21, 1811. He mentions brother James Carter, and left his property to be divided equally between “Mr. Charles Webb for his kindness to me this present year, and to the poorest man in Lancaster county....”

“The Will of John Graves of the parrish of St. George and County of Spotsylvania was witnessed by: Joseph Holladay, Benj. A. Holladay, Beery Lewis, and William Webb, 1747.”
